I-1. Orientation

Every new employee completes orientation before working with a client.[1] Orientation covers agency policies, the client bill of rights, abuse, neglect, and exploitation reporting, the limits of supportive care, emergency procedures, documentation, and the Employee Handbook (Section M).[2] It also covers:[3]

- Timekeeping, including clock-in and clock-out procedures;[4]
- Recognizing hazards in the home that need prompt attention;[5]
- Medication reminders: workers may ask, prompt, hand the client the marked reminder container, and open it if the client cannot; workers do not set up or give medications (see G-9);[6]
- Prohibited services: no medical services, including checking vital signs, assisting with physical therapy, or checking wounds;[7]
- Communication and de-escalation; and[8]
- Stress management and burnout prevention, including self-care, agency support, and speaking up when something is not working or work and life are out of balance.[3]

Orientation is a half-day session of a few hours, plus virtual training modules the employee completes at home.[3] Orientation time is paid.[9]

I-2. Supportive Care Worker Training

Workers are trained to deliver the plan of care in each of these areas:[10]

- Communication skills, with focus on clients with hearing deficits, dementia, or other special needs;[11]
- Observation, reporting, and documentation of client status and services provided;[12]
- Basic infection control;[13]
- Basic body functioning and changes that must be reported to the manager;[14]
- Keeping a clean, safe, and healthy environment;[15]
- Recognizing emergencies and the agency's emergency procedures;[16]
- Recognizing physical, emotional, and developmental needs of clients;[17]
- Respecting the client and the client's privacy and property;[18]

- Safe techniques in personal hygiene and grooming;[19]
- The client bill of rights; and[20]
- Safe use of any equipment needed for services.[21]

I-3. Competency Checklist

Each worker shows competency in every area in I-2 before providing care without the manager present, and again every year.[22] Competency is shown by direct observation and return demonstration.[23] Gait belts, lift devices, and oxygen flow settings require their own sign-off before a worker uses them.[24] Workers set oxygen flow only according to written instructions when changing tanks, and only after the training and competency sign-off above.[25] Before using slings or mechanical lifting equipment, a worker receives hands-on instruction from a physical or occupational therapist or completes an approved online training module.[26] The administrator evaluates competency.[23] A manager or supervisor may also evaluate it at the administrator's request.[23] The signed checklist is filed in the personnel record.[27]

I-4. Annual and Ongoing Training

Each manager and worker receives ongoing training at least once a year, and more often as client needs require.[28] Training covers the services the agency provides and the equipment used.[29] Abuse, neglect, and exploitation training is repeated every year as set in Section F.[30] The subject and date of each session go in the employee's file.[31] Training time is paid.[9] Each manager and worker completes at least 8 hours of ongoing training a year.[32] Each year's training includes the safe use of any equipment the agency uses, with competency re-checked as set in I-3; TB education; and preventing bedsores, including frequent position changes, and whom to call when a worker sees a bedsore that looks concerning.[33]

I-5. Supervision of Supportive Care Workers

The agency employs a manager, named in Appendix C-A, who is available to workers for questions at all times by phone at (785) 323-0104.[34] The manager makes an on-site visit to each client at least every three months to supervise the worker.[35] Each visit includes an assessment of the client's satisfaction with services and the worker's adherence to the plan of care, and the visit date is recorded in the client record.[36]

Until other staff are hired, the manager is also the only caregiver.[37] The owner stays manager after staff are hired, until operations and revenue are steady.[3] The owner's own care is reviewed by the alternate administrator named in Appendix C-A.[38]
